WILLIAM S. PITTMAN - HISTORY & BACKGROUND

- William S. Pittman was born on April 21, 1875 in Montgomery Alabama. His mother was an ex-slave laundress and an unknown father.
- He was the architect of the original 1910 building at Garfield Elementary, and the first African American architect to design a public school building in DC
- He attended the Tuskegee Institute in Tuskegee, Alabama to complete programs in woodworking and architectural/mechanical drafting.
- He was awarded a scholarship to Drexel Institute in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, which was all white at his time of attendance, where he completed his architecture degree.
- In 1907 he married Portia Washington, the daughter of Booker T. Washington.
- Some of his notable works include numerous buildings on Tuskegee's campus, the Negro Building at the Tercentennial Exposition at Jamestown in 1907, the Pythian Temple and the St. James African Methodist Episcopal Church in Dallas.
- Pittman helped to organize the Brotherhood of Negro Building Mechanics in Texas which he later led as president.
- In 1928 he published the weekly newspaper The Brotherhood Eyes which he used to publish his criticisms of the black community.
